Seeing stars: Pupils in Space Odyssey

■ Space is the final frontier, as Captain Kirk, late of the Starship Enterprise, is wont to tell us. But its wonders and mysteries were brought home to the pupils of Wendron School in much more down-to-earth fashion when they experienced the mobile Space Odyssey planetarium, a dome offering shows and presentations in different mediums. The pupils were shown the changing night skies, courtesy of experienced science teacher Simon Ould, who accompanies the dome on its travels to schools around the country. They also saw depictions of planets and space flight and, topically, of the recent lunar eclipse which could be seen – for real – in Cornish night skies a few weeks ago.
